

Storm Worries

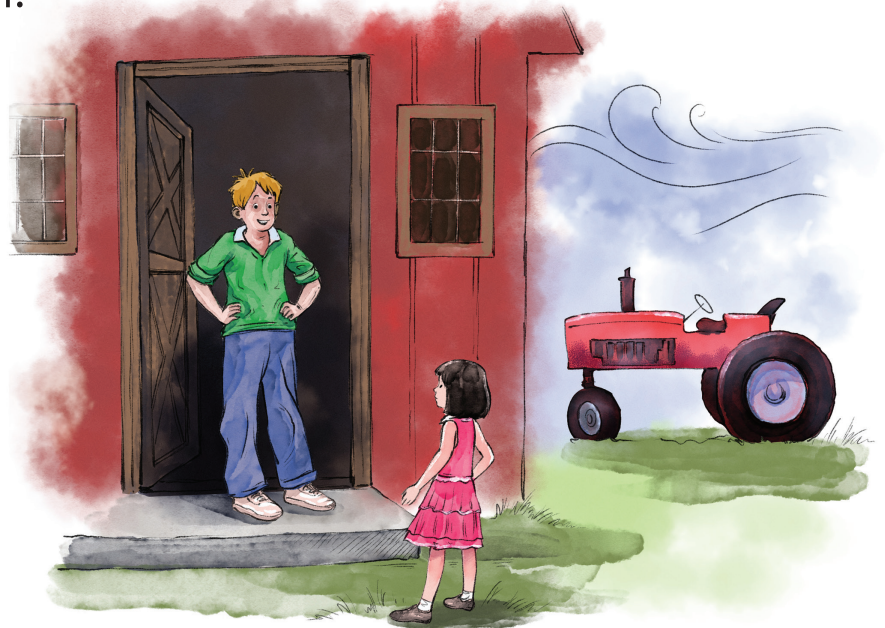

Cora's favorite thing to do in the morning was sit on the porch, where it was cool even on a scorching hot day. But this morning, it was very windy. It made Cora worry that another storm was coming from the north.

Just the year before, there had been a tornado that formed in the north. Forty boats in the port had been blown around. The tree fort she had built with her friends had been knocked down.

Cora's brother came out on the porch. "Do you think we are getting a storm or maybe a tornado?" she asked him.

Her brother snorted. "You worry too much. Come on, be a good sport and help me work on the tractor. You can help by turning on the motor when I need it."

Cora loved to drive the tractor, and so she ran after her brother, forgetting about the wind and if another tornado or storm might come.
