

The Missing Homework

One chilly afternoon, Holly was nearly done doing her weekly spelling homework when the phone rang. She quickly went to answer it, but when she came back, her homework paper was gone.

She looked around. The window was closed. It was unlikely the wind had blown it off.

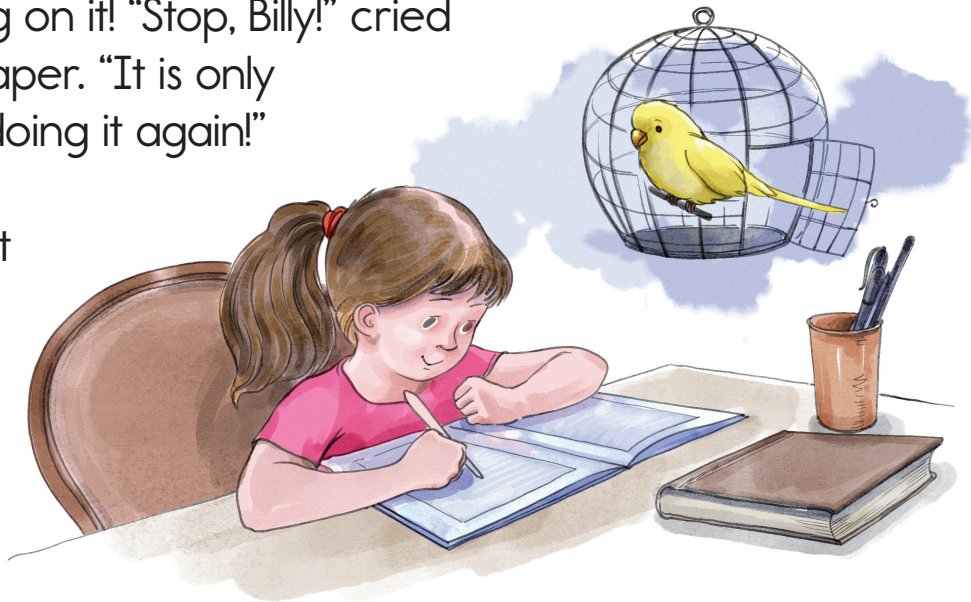

“Mom, have you seen my homework?” Holly called.

“I am sorry, I haven’t,” said her mother.

“Where can it be? I was mostly done, and I went to answer the phone. Now it is gone,” Holly said sadly. She began to do the weekly homework again and easily redid it.

Then her parrot, Billy, swooped down and picked up the paper and began chewing on it! “Stop, Billy!” cried Holly. She picked up the paper. “It is only slightly chewed. I am not doing it again!”

The next day, Holly brought her partly chewed paper to her teacher.
